Kris,

Juniper does not agree to extend the deadline for Finjan's reply. The rough transcript for your reply will be available immediately following the deposition, so you will have two full business days to integrate any testimony from the deposition into your reply, which is more than sufficient.

As to the source code, you misinterpret the Court's Order. The Court did not require Juniper to produce hard copies of source code in addition to producing the source code computer (which includes the complete source code). Rather, the Court simply ordered that we "produce" the requested source code, and Juniper is producing the source code in electronic format so that Finjan can inspect all of the cited code in context.

Regards,
 Josh

Thanks Josh. We will also get back to you soon on the exact location for the Mitzenmacher deposition. Regarding the Rubin deposition, we are looking into the provided dates, but are not able to do the deposition on the 30th, which is a Saturday and was only provided two days ago. We are fine with taking his deposition on the 2nd, but then need more time to complete the reply. We can agree to the 2nd if Juniper stipulates to (and the Court agrees to allow), Finjan's Reply brief to be filed on April 8th to make sure we have sufficient time to receive a transcript and use it for our reply brief.

Regarding the source code, we will be there on the 28th for the review. We assume that you will produce the hard copies of the source code you identified at the same time on the 28th, as also ordered by the Court? We've identified the following source code that you will need to be print in hardcopy. Let us know by tomorrow at noon if you disagree with any of the identified source code files.

- Copy of the complete source code files calling the referenced [REDACTED]
- Copy of the complete source code file excerpted in Juniper's Exhibit J.
- Copy of the complete source code file for the following:
 - [REDACTED]
- Complete copy of the source code in the following directories:
 - [REDACTED]

Kris,

Regarding Dr. Mitzenmacher, we currently believe we can take his deposition on March 28, and we will confirm on Tuesday.

As for the source code review, thank you for providing the explanation as to why you believe you must review the source code computer. We are looking into your request to review the source code on March 28 and 29 and will get back to you shortly. Additionally, Dr. Rubin attached as an exhibit some representative code for specific functions; we will produce the other code for functions that Dr. Rubin specifically cited but did not attach due to page limits.

Thanks,
Josh

Josh,

Finjan is entitled to investigate Juniper's allegations raised for the first time in its opposition before filing its reply brief. This includes source code that was cited, but not attached as an exhibit, and is only available on the source code review computer. We understand your email to be Juniper refusing to make the source code available on March 20th or the 21st. As I've requested repeatedly, explain, in writing, what this staffing issue is and why Juniper represents that it cannot host a source code review on either March 20th or 21st. Otherwise, Finjan will be required to bring this to the Court.
