"The Nokia 9110i Communicator will continue to support the Internet browsing and e-mail services, but the add-on WAP application will provide users with access to a new emerging group of mobile Internet services. The large display and the keyboard function of the communicator are ideal for WAP based services with graphics and tables. Services, such as mobile banking, news and various corporate Intranet applications, will be particularly fast and convenient to use with the Nokia 9110i Communicator," said Søren Jenry Petersen, Vice President, Cellular Mobile Telephones, Nokia Mobile Phones.

The Nokia 9110i Communicator will also support the Quick Imaging and Find applications as new add-on software. To enhance the usability and functionality, the Nokia 9110i Communicator will have the Outlook 2000 support for PC Suite. It will also provide the MacSuite software for transferring information and software between communicators and Macintosh computers. Both of these software add-ons will also be available for current Nokia 9110 Communicator users.

The Nokia 9110i Communicator is a multipurpose communication tool combining the GSM 900 phone with data communication capabilities, including telefax, Internet, WAP, e-mail, wireless imaging, short messages and organizer functions. In addition, the large base of the third party software enables new solutions to accommodate corporate needs. A list of the applications can be found at:
