Trey Gaming Chair is Both an Office Chair and a Gentleman

While your standard office chair is great for when you need to file your taxes and a bean bag is great for when you're getting lazy in the living room, there's rarely a time you'll be able to use one for the other's purpose. That's why this Trey Gaming Chair is so neat, especially for dorms and apartments where space is tight.

The chair looks like a normal chair at first, but you can detach the back or the bottom in order to turn it into a stool, a rocking chair, a tray, a tiny chair or a foot rest. All this at a price of $239, and you've got the perfect chair for college kids. – Jason Chen

It'd be nice to see people post with perfect grammar 100% of the time, but as long as I get the gist of what is being said, it's not big deal. What irks me much more are commenters who love to rattle on about how poor some people's English skills are.

True, most people are probably just too lazy to care. But, you've got to keep in mind that this is the internet, hosting an international community of readers. Not everyone has the ability to string a perfect sentence in English together (even if it is their native language), or the sense to download Firefox 2.0 which features built-in spell check.

If the English is so bad that you just can't understand it, then ask the person to clarify. If the person is being a douche anyways, then go ahead and mock them. But if they're just trying to make a comment, then leave them alone.

SBGUY27 is right, that chair loves taking it from chairs of the same gender.

Anyways, you know what chairs need to make a come back? those kneeling computer chairs from the 80's. Not because they were extremely comfortable, but more because they were so weird.

here's one: <http://www.sitincomfort.com/hagbalvittas.h...>

Why did the Giz start accepting commenters who failed English class?

Is it money? Is money the issue? Because I'd get a job just to support Giz and just so I don't have to look at lazy morons' comments for the duration of my visit to the Gizzy.

One of the girls at work uses one of these ergo ball chairs. I don't know if it helps her posture, but it makes for lots of small talk around her office

There's an old adage about dressing for success. Basically, it's about image. If you look the part, it will help you get the part.

Now to my comment...if I see someone on a goofy modular chair or ergo ball, I'm not thinking management material. If they have the kneeling chair, I'm thinking something about presidents, cigars, and spotty dresses.

Get a solid chair, tighten the screws, and act like the decisions you make affect more than the chair you sit in.
