3 WHEREUPON THE CASE HAVING BEEN CALLED AND
4 APPEARANCES GIVEN, THE FOLLOWING PROCEEDINGS
5 WERE HELD:

6 THE COURT: All right. Shall we start with the
7 patentee? what shall we do? what's your preference?

8 MR. ZWEIFACH: well, your Honor, it's fine with us
Page 4

9 for you to start with the patentee, and I do have one piece
10 of good news for you. You will not be disappointed to hear
11 that we have resolved one of the six controversies.

12 THE COURT: No, you haven't.

13 MR. ZWEIFACH: It's a small one, but it's better
14 than nothing.

15 THE COURT: Is it the "or"?

16 MR. ZWEIFACH: No, no. It's the phrase "variable
17 domain of the immunoglobulin."

18 THE COURT: What did you decide about that?

19 MR. ZWEIFACH: We went with a phrase that was a
20 characterization that was in the joint statement that was
21 submitted to your Honor when I wasn't here. But something
22 tells me your Honor encouraged both sides to try to resolve
23 some of their differences. This has the feel of that kind of 24 document. Anyway, there's a characterization of what we 25 should agree is the variable domain of immunoglobulin. And

1 we agree with this. The end -- terminal end of the heavy and
2 light chains up to the beginning of the content domain.

3 THE COURT: All right.

4 MR. ZWEIFACH: So that's -- we agree on that, and
5 so we're down to five.

6 THE COURT: That's fine. All right. Would you
7 rather start with -- it doesn't make a particle of difference
8 to me. If you agree to the way you're going to proceed, then
9 do that. Otherwise, I think we should start with you.

10 MR. ZWEIFACH: Well, I'd be happy to start.
