Introduction & Preface

The use of the ubiquitous TV set as an information display and interactive personal electronic communication device will bring dramatic changes to the way in which we conduct our day-to-day lives. The effect will at first be most apparaent in business with the easy availability of computer-stored information and the ability to send and receive mail electronically. The effect will then become apparent in the home with the TV set gradually enhancing its primary role of entertainment device to incorporate information acquisition, computer-aided education and electronic message transmission.

This book comprises written back-up to the presentations given at Viewdata '80 - The First World Conference on Viewdata, Videotex and Teletext.

To ensure that the preprints are as up-to-date as possible, the authors have supplied them to us in camera-ready form which does not allow for editing and for this reason we would ask for your understanding with some of the overseas papers where English is not the author's native language. In order to keep the book as up-to-date as possible, the papers have been printed in random order.
