 - Q. So a few minutes ago you mentioned a project with MTel involving a two-way paging system; is that right?
 - A. Yes.

- Q. Can you please describe the work that you performed on that project.
- A. On that project, the objective was -- you know, MTel at that time had paging networks nationwide, but they ran out of capacity. So that traffic in the network was too high. So they had run into delays and stuff. So they asked us to improve throughputs in paging networks.

And the objective of this project was to design a new network that would have higher throughput and better spectrum utilization, that is with a given channel bandwidth to send more bits than existing networks.

And to utilize nationwide network better.

Original network would send the same messages nationwide even though a device is located in some particular location.

So we designed this two-way paging so that you can send messages locally, not nationwide.

- A. I'm not quite sure, but I think it was Bill Hays. But maybe some other people.
 - Q. Were you ever employed by MTel?
- A. I was never employed directly, but they sponsored research. And, for example, I was, you know, ten -- nine-month employee of the university. And during summer months I was receiving basically salary based on this project from University of -- from MTel.
- Q. So you were paid by MTel for some of the work that you performed on this project?
- A. But it was through the university. So they paid for the project, and then from the project I drew my salary, yes.
 - Q. Did that project have a lab associated with it?
- A. Yes.
- Q. Can you describe that lab for me?
 - A. We called it Wireless Communication Lab. And it was located in NCPA building, National Center for Physical Acoustics. I'm not 100 sure what was their acronym for.

And MTel provided the equipment. They purchased, you know, instruments for the lab, computers, and all other stuff. And we had, you know, graduate program and graduate students working in the lab for the project. And they got scholarships based on the understanding that MTel had a one-way paging network?

- A. Yes.
- Q. When did your work with MTel start?
- A. I'm not 100 percent sure, but it was early in my work in the University of Mississippi. Probably 1990 or 1991. I'm not 100 percent sure.
- Q. Do you recall approximately how long that project lasted with MTel?
- A. Yeah, I think it lasted until 1995 or 1996. I'm not 100 percent sure either.
 - Q. How did you first learn of MTel?
- A. I learned of MTel in a meeting that was held at University of Mississippi. Apparently they had some ongoing cooperation, MTel and the university. And in this meeting I met representatives of MTel, and we discussed mutual interests. And I realized that they are helping University of Mississippi, sponsoring projects, and that I had an opportunity to ask them for additional projects.
- Q. Who did you meet with at this meeting that was a representative from MTel?

project.

- Q. Was the lab open to the public while you were working on it with MTel?
 - A. No.
- 5 Q. Who was the lab open to?
 - A. Students and staff.
 - Q. All students and staff, or students and staff working on the project?
 - A. I think students and staff working on the project, yes.
 - Q. For this project you were working on with MTel, who did you work with at MTel?
- A. At MTel? There was another consultant that worked for MTel, not employee of MTel, Walt Roehr. And there were a number of MTel people: Dennis Cameron, Bill Hays, Kunio Tano, and so on.
 - Q. You mentioned Walt Roehr?
- 18 A. Yes.
 - Q. Do you recall what Mr. Roehr's responsibilities were for this project?
 - A. I don't know exactly responsibilities. He was a consultant of MTel. He had his own company. And he was major participant in the project in design, and testing experiments, so on. So he had a major role in this project.
