(57)ABSTRACT

The present invention relates to a multi-component packing that allows for the separation of two or more substances that come in liquid, power or small grains form, held inside independent chambers. As a result, the mixing of the components can be made by the user at the moment of application, enabling the preservation of the components chemical properties, which should not be mixed until the moment of application. The invention prevents the contact of the substances with the user and the environment, making their transportation easier, reducing the number of pieces and steps in the mixing operation. It makes only necessary firstly the rupture of the seals that separate the multiple independent chambers that hold the components, secondly the shake movement for homogenizing the mixing for its application, and finally the removal of the mixing for application.
