Contrary to statements made in their motion to exclude (e.g., Paper 44 at 7), Petitioners now correctly note that an objecting party bears the burden of proof in an IPR, and that it must meet that burden with a thorough explanation of the objection. Moreover, according to Petitioners, a paralegal can provide sufficient testimony to overcome authentication and hearsay objections. These arguments highlight some of the problems with Weatherford's and Baker Hughes's authentication and hearsay objections. Accordingly, to the extent the Board overrules their hearsay and authentication objections that have been asserted without a detailed explanation or that are based on alleged deficiencies in the declarations offered by Rapid Completions, Rapid Completions withdraws the present motion.
