MR. CONCA: Thank you, Your Honor.

THE COURT: Okay.

MR. CONCA: Your Honor, defendants' motion for judgment under 52(c) should be denied because it suffers from several fundamental flaws.

First, it ignores the extensive affirmative documentary evidence that the defendants' products are macroscopically homogeneous, which includes numerous ANDA product development documents reflecting the substantial efforts that defendants made to design their products and their manufacturing process for making them so that the blended excipients will be homogeneous throughout the manufacturing process, and so that the resulting tablets will likewise remain homogeneous. These documents, including defendants' own extensive use of internal active ingredient uniformity testing, including express admissions in these documents that the defendants themselves use active ingredient uniformity testing with results routinely close to a hundred percent as a surrogate to demonstrate excipient homogeneity in the product blend.

For example, PTX-230 at page 4 states, "In addition, the final blend was also found to be homogeneous based on the results of blend uniformity studies and had good compressibility."

08:52:52 1 PTX-228 at 193. "To assess homogeneity of 08:52:58 2 the blend, blend uniformity sampling will still be 08:53:01 3 performed."

08:53:01 4 Further, both defendants' documents establish 08:53:04 5 that the tablet compression was designed to minimize 08:53:07 6 segregation of the homogeneous product blends created during 08:53:11 7 their respective manufacturing processes, during those
08:53:14 8 mixing processes.

08:53:15 9 Alvogen's PTX-228 at 170, "The compression
08:53:20 10 process must provide the desired dose in each tablet by 08:53:25 11 avoiding segregation of the uniform blend." And Actavis'
08:53:29 12 PTX-230. "This process of blending in a series of steps
08:53:34 13 ensured homogeneous mixing of nine milligrams of active
08:53:37 14 ingredient in 300 milligrams of blend as evidenced by blend
08:53:41 15 uniformity data and content uniformity data from the core
08:53:44 16 tablet."

08:53:45 17 These ANDA documents are legal representations
08:53:48 18 to FDA and defendants can't deviate from them without 08:53:52 19 amending their ANDAs.

08:53:53 20 THE COURT: Where is the documentary evidence
08:53:54 21 that it is macroscopically homogeneous as viewed by the 08:54:01 22 naked eye?

08:54:03 23 MR. CONCA: The documentary evidence includes
08:54:06 24 defendants' witness testimony, but the documentary evidence 08:54:09 25 itself is the photographs that the defendants' experts took
