Clinical opinions expressed in articles are those of the authors and do not necessarily reflect the opinions of the sponsor, advertisers, editors or the publisher and officers of PRR, Inc. ONCOLOGY strives to select knowledgeable, experienced authors and reviewers for articles and to answer clinical queries from readers. However, neither the editors nor publisher can guarantee the clinical advice offered.

Readers must take into account that answers to clinical questions are formulated without benefit of personal examination of the patient and are based only on the information supplied by the physician making the inquiry. As our readers must surely appreciate, our editorial advisors, consultants, and reviewers cannot diagnose or prescribe for a particular patient without actually seeing the patient. Thus, the general comments in this journal are based on the clinical experience of the authors, reviewers, and consultants and should not be construed as a formal consultation or specific recommendation for a particular patient.

The authors, editors, and publisher take extreme care to be certain that drugs and dosage recommendations are precise and accurate. However, typographical errors can occur. Therefore, be sure to double-check all dosage schedules in articles against the manufacturer's package information data. Also, dosages and methods of administration of pharmaceutical products mentioned by authors may not necessarily be the same as those listed in the package insert. Such dosages and delivery methods may reflect the clinical experience of the author or authors and/or may reflect the experience of other clinical investigators.
