Petitioner's Reply mischaracterizes the prior art and briefing¹ and improperly introduces a multitude of new evidence and arguments, but it still fails to remedy fatal defects in the Petition that reach every challenged claim. First, the Petition failed to show any disclosure in the asserted references of multiple elements of the independent claims. Second, the Petition failed to show that a person of ordinary skill in the art ("POSITA") would have been motivated to combine the asserted references to arrive at the independent claims—in fact, the references are fundamentally different, and they teach directly away from Petitioner's proposed combination. Third, for additional reasons, the Petition failed to prove that dependent claims 2, 7, 11, 14, 15, 26, and 34 would have been obvious. Finally, Petitioner's Reply fails to rebut secondary considerations of non-obviousness. Accordingly, the Board should not find any challenged claim unpatentable.

¹ For example, the very first line of Petitioner's Reply asserts that Patent Owner's Response ("POR") "repeats arguments that the Board already rejected" (Reply at 1), but that is plainly wrong. The Board has not rejected (or even had the opportunity to rule on) any of Patent Owner's substantive arguments in this proceeding.
