Pretty in Pink

"Designers are finally sitting down and trying to understand what girls want. They can't just frilly up the characters and sell them in a pink box," said New York video game analyst Sean McGowan on the influx of this fall's girls-only programs, which include Talk With Me Barbie, Barbie's Magic Hair Styler, Cosmopolitan Virtual Makeover, and Wig Out. Hmm, if these glamour games don't get girls interested in using computers, we can't imagine what would.

BUGGING OUT

Disk Charmer, a disk-formatting shareware utility by Fabrizio Oddone, humbly offers up this opinion on Apple Menu Options:

Grand Delusions

"I know that I've rescued this company." —former Apple CEO Gillet Amelio in an exclusive interview with the San Jose Mercury News, one week before Apple announced a $56 million loss.

Apple Menu Options is installed; every version, even the one in System 7.5 Update 2.0 (a.k.a. System 7.5.3), is plagued with nasty bugs. Consider using another utility instead.

OK, Don't Show Again

OK

BUYING TIME

"The Monopoly Clock (<http://www.vcnet.com/bms/msw/clock.html>) tracks the countdown to the final and complete monopolization of the technology and communications industries by Microsoft, and the midnight hour of consumer choice." —The Monopoly Clock. And to think that we used to complain about daylight saving time.

The Naked Truth

"What is significant is that 60-year-old women can keep up with the younger guys," Vint Cerf, the senior vice president of Internet architecture and engineering for MCI, commented in a July 3, 1997, New York Times article on a test showing that older women could navigate the Web better than young men could. We're just relieved that there's finally an explanation for the huge increase in downloads of Paul Newman nude pics—Sandra Bullock was starting to get jealous.

ASK AGAIN LATER

"We're out of the business of predicting when this company will return to profitability," stated Apple's chief financial officer, Fred Anderson, in a public announcement to the press, held only moments after a halt was called to the hours-long search that failed to locate the company's official Magic 8 Ball.

You Don't Say

"I think the Macintosh is going to continue to be very, very, important in the educational environment for a long, long period of time." —Microsoft Chairman Bill Gates speaking to a crowd of about 5,000 educators at the National Educational Computing Conference in Seattle last June.

According to unidentified sources, when the real Bill Gates discovered what his non-evil twin had done, he was really, really mad.

MacAddict Corrections

- ★ In last issue's annual list of What's Hot and What's Shot in technology, we failed to mention: the Nintendo 64, Tamagotchi, Firewire, the Unabomber, virtual reality, raves, the Information Superhighway, Vice President Al Gore, Gino's pizza rolls, browser wars, carpal tunnel syndrome, Cheryl England, and mouse accessories. We regret these omissions.
- ★ Last issue's feature story on clip art was really boring. We apologize.
- ★ Last month's Disc should have featured an exclusive interview with Steve Jobs discussing his role as an adviser at Apple and Gillet Amelio's secret last days, but once again, we forgot to call him. Oh well.
- ★ In several of last month's photo illustrations we featured Macintosh computers when we meant to show you Isaac Mizrahi's fall fashion lineup. Again, we apologize for the mix-up.
- ★ An article in last issue's Get Info section referred to intranets as the "next big thing." We were recently informed that no one cares. Sorry.
