Summary 1

Argument..... 1

I. Ground 2: Moore does not anticipate the challenged claims. 1

 A. The Petition does not rely on inherency arguments. 2

 B. Moore does not explicitly say Storefront Pages and Buy Pages should have corresponding overall appearance..... 2

 C. Anticipation cannot be premised only on expert speculation about what a POSITA supposedly “would understand from a disclosure.” 3

 D. Petitioner bears the burden of proof. 4

 E. Petitioner fails to prove that its interpretation of Moore is necessary or even plausible. 5

 1. Petitioner relies on a set of assumptions not explicit in Moore. 5

 2. Petitioner’s interpretation is not required..... 6

 3. Petitioner’s interpretation contradicts Moore’s explicit teachings. 7

 4. Petitioner’s Reply fails to support its interpretation of Moore. 10

 a. “All/each/any” in Moore’s section 6b refers to Storefront Pages..... 10

b. The Reply newly tenders misleading, off-point arguments about page creation, servlets, Java classes, and style components.....13

5. Other evidence calls into question Petitioner’s interpretation and supports Patent Owner’s interpretation.....18

a. Petitioner’s Reply fails to dispute that the PTO examiner rejected its interpretation of Moore.....18

b. Petitioner’s witness presented technically inaccurate information and has no answer to being “called out” on it.19

c. Petitioner’s Reply fails to rebut the evidence that limitations on the amount of information contained in a Price URL prevent making Buy Pages look like complex Storefront Pages.....21

F. Dependent claims: The Reply simply ignores deficiencies in the Petition’s showing of anticipation (or obviousness, as to Ground 3).....22

G. Because Moore does not teach corresponding overall visual appearance, Moore does not anticipate any of the challenged claims.....24

II. Grounds 1 and 4: The Reply presents no additional argument about the Digital River Publications.....24

III. Conclusion.....25
