

The Android Networked Cross-License, which we call "PAX" for short, is a royalty-free patent cross-license that covers Android and Google Applications preinstalled on devices that meet Android's compatibility requirements. We call it a community license because all members license to one another on a royalty-free basis, thereby promoting patent peace within the ecosystem. By joining, you will receive broad, long-term freedom of action with respect to Android and Google Applications from all other members. We believe this materially reduces patent risk. And best yet, it's free to join and open to anyone.

We were delighted to launch PAX with 9 members: Google, Samsung Electronics, LG Electronics, HTC, Foxconn Technology Group, Coolpad, BQ, HMD Global, and Allview. In total, the member companies own more than 230,000 patents worldwide. We encourage other companies, large and small, to consider the PAX License. In short, with respect to Android and Google Applications, the PAX license stands for patent peace between the signatories.
