Intralesional liposcopy treatment with a volumizing hyaluronic acid filler
 Javidon, MD, MS, Sacramento VA Medical Center, Mather, CA, United States
Background: HIV (neel liposcopy) (HV FIA) is a medical condition that occurs secondary to highly active antiretroviral therapy (HAART), and affects quality-of-life and adherence to HAART medications in the region. There is an urgent need for treatment of HIV FIA due to limited treatment options currently available. Botulinum toxin (Botox) and hyaluronic acid (HA) represent a different class of filler than the two HV FIA FDA approved classes with significant advantages for patients. A 20 mg/mL HA filler (Volbella, Allergan) may provide immediate aesthetic correction of HIV FIA, and fewer adverse events. The purpose of this study is to evaluate the effectiveness and safety of HV FIA, and if this filler includes the ability to use hyaluronidase to “correct” or “modify” HA therapy.
Methods: Subjects received one treatment (midface and temples) and one optional touch-up. All subjects have received their 3-month follow-up evaluation. Final study results will be reported at the time of the 6-month follow-up evaluation. The Global Aesthetic Improvement Scale (GAIS) were used to evaluate efficacy. Subjects were scored pre-treatment, immediately post-treatment, and at all follow-up visits. The study included 12 patients who were treated with HA filler. At 6 weeks post-treatment, 95% CI 0.83, 1.0 and all 20 subjects achieved GAIS score of 1. GAIS scored 100% (95% CI 0.83, 1.0) binomial confidence interval of subjects as “very much improved”. There were no treatment-related adverse events, vision or neurological changes.
Conclusion: Volbely results demonstrate excellent safety and efficacy and support use of this HA filler for treatment of HIV FIA. We hope this filler can be used for HIV FIA with the desired ultimate goal of FDA approval of this HA filler for treatment of HIV FIA.

Periorbital lipoparaboma after autologous fat injection for forehead
 Hyun-Soo Lee, MD, Department of Dermatology, Ajou University School of Medicine, Suwon, South Korea, Ji Young Yang, MD, Department of Dermatology, Ajou University School of Medicine, Suwon, South Korea, Youn Chan Kim, MD, PhD, Department of Dermatology, Ajou University School of Medicine, Suwon, South Korea
Background: Fat injection (AFI) for facial augmentation has become a popular cosmetic procedure at local plastic surgery clinics. It is considered safe, with no severe adverse reactions compared to synthetic filler injection. However, we encountered the patient with periorbital lipoparaboma, a rare side effect of AFI for forehead fat injection. She had received cosmetic AFI on the forehead at local plastic surgery clinics twice, 7 and 4 months previously. The fat tissue was harvested from her thighs at the first injection and stored frozen for the second injection. Histopathology: a foreign body reaction with lipid crystals. The immunohistochemical study revealed a cellular reaction with epithelioid cells. This was unaided diagnosed with lipoparaboma following AFI for forehead augmentation. Periorbital lipoparaboma after fat injection for forehead augmentation have rarely been described in the literature of ophthalmology and plastic surgery in Korea. It is considered a rare side effect of AFI. The patient’s reaction to the AFI was a case of overexpression, cause less of stability, which may lead to a foreign body reaction and failure of engagement. Dermatologists should know that periorbital lipoparaboma can rarely occur after AFI for forehead augmentation.

The effect of needle size on pain perception in patients treated with botulinum toxin A injections. A split-face, patient- and injector-blinded randomized controlled trial
 Sunjaya Byong, MD, Northwestern University, Chicago, IL, United States, Amelia Greber, Northwestern University, Chicago, IL, United States, Davis Subhwni, MD, Northwestern University, Chicago, IL, United States, Kim Mikole, MD, PhD, Weill Cornell Medical College, New York, NY, United States, Murali Alam, MD, Northwestern University, Chicago, IL, United States
Background: Transcutaneous injection through smaller hollow bore needles may decrease patient discomfort but current evidence is equivocal.
Objective: This study compares injection discomfort with the use of 30-g versus 32-gauge needles.
Methods: In a double-blinded, split-face, randomized controlled trial, one side of the face was treated with 30-gauge needles, and the contralateral side with a 32-gauge needle. Other side with a 30-gauge needle. In addition, each subject received randomized injections of saline to their upper inner arms. Subjects were between the ages of 25 to 70, in good health, female, and with moderate dynamic wrinkles on the forehead. The study was approved by the Institutional Review Board in February 2013 at an urban university dermatology clinic.
Results: Twenty subjects completed the study. Primary outcomes measured: patient-reported pain on a visual analog scale (VAS) on either side of the face and arms, and the proportion of patients with clinically significant pain. Secondary outcomes measured: patient-reported comfort, burn, bruise, and redness with 30-gauge and 32-gauge needles (face: 4.16 vs 3.41, P = 33; arm: 1.66 vs 1.21, P = 45). For facial injections, 40% of subjects reported clinically significant pain (VAS  $\geq$  5.3) with the use of 30-gauge needles, and 30% of subjects with the use of 32-gauge needles (0.83-3.90, P = 158). P = 14.24). A higher proportion of patients reported pain upon facial with needle type. There was no difference in character of pain associated with needle bore.
Conclusion: For facial injections of neurotoxin in saline, 30-gauge needles were associated with a greater incidence of clinically significant pain than 32-gauge needles, but both types of needles may minimize this discomfort.

The facial adipose system its role in facial aging and approaches to volume restoration
 Neil Sautick, MD, Sautick Research Group, New York, NY, United States, Andrew Sautick, MD, Sautick Research Group, New York, NY, United States, Nels Sautick, MD, Sautick Research Group, New York, NY, United States, MD, Sautick Research Group, New York, NY, United States
Background: Volume loss in facial adipose tissue plays a critical role in the aesthetics of facial aging. Furthermore, the facial adipose system is a complex network of distinct compartments, and a detailed understanding of these compartments is essential for optimal facial volume restoration.
Methods: Publications including cadaver dissection studies and more recent studies using computed tomography were reviewed to provide an up-to-date understanding of the facial adipose system anatomy and age-related changes. Current volume restoration treatment options including hyaluronic acid, calcium hydroxyapatite, and poly-L-lactic acid are discussed with volume loss in superfacial and deep adipose compartments, including those of the forehead, cheek, lip, chin, and jaw areas. Volume restoration products can be used to address the age-related changes of the facial adipose compartments.
Conclusion: Understanding the complex network of facial adipose compartments and their age-related changes allows for the optimal use of injectable volume restoration products. A detailed understanding of facial lipoparaboma can be customized to the individual needs of each patient.

A case of idiopathic serosal calcinosis in a 25-year-old Filipino who underwent partial orchiectomy
 Arvin J. Conde, MD, East Avenue Medical Center, Quezon City, Philippines, Elizabeth Pinto, MD, East Avenue Medical Center, Quezon City, Philippines, Amelita Sacbrando, MD, East Avenue Medical Center, Quezon City, Philippines
Introduction: Serosal calcinosis is a rare benign disorder of the serosal skin characterized by multiple painless, firm, nodular calcium deposits. In a recent case report, a patient with idiopathic serosal calcinosis was treated with 32-gauge needles. The etiology of this disease remains unknown, but in a tertiary hospital in the Philippines, this is the second reported case. Numerous theories have been proposed to explain the pathogenesis of this condition, whether the calcium is deposited at the site of previous epithelial cysts or calcifications or in the papillary dermis.
Case: This is a 25-year-old male with a two-year history of multiple whitish firm and nontender nodules over the scrotum, gradually increasing in size and number causing concerns of disfigurement. Serum calcium level is normal. Excision biopsy of a nodule was done which revealed well-circumscribed calcium deposits in the papillary dermis covering about 90% of the scrotum. The patient was managed with medical therapy and partial orchiectomy was done.
Conclusion: Serosal calcinosis is a rare benign disorder of the serosal skin that can cause disfigurement thus immediate management is sought. A multiplicity of collagen is recommended for a more comprehensive management.

Aldeguer, MD, East Avenue Medical Center, Quezon City, Philippines, Clarissa Aragon, MD, East Avenue Medical Center, Quezon City, Philippines, East Avenue Medical Center, Quezon City, Philippines
Introduction: Nevus lipomatous superificials is a rare benign hamartomatous skin lesion. It is classified into 2 types, solitary and multiple. The multiple type, as seen in this case, is characterized by multiple, well-circumscribed, dermal nodules, which may be flesh-colored or yellow papules and/or nodules in a segmental pattern. Distribution of lesions is linear, zosteriform, or along the lines of the skin folds. Surfaces are smooth, but may also have verrucous or cerebriform appearance. Pathogenesis is unclear, but may be related to a mutation in the LMNB1 gene. Histopathology reveals aggregates of mature adipose tissue among the collagen bundles of the dermis. This is the first reported case in this institution. Histopathology reveals presence of aggregates of mature adipose tissue among the collagen bundles of the dermis. Case summary: DF is a 14-year-old, Filipino, female, who consulted due to multiple, painless, soft papules over the right lower back, and extending to the right thigh. She has a family history of nevus lipomatous superificials. Past medical, family, and social history were noncontributory. Initial impression was scleroderma. Excision biopsy revealed mature adipose tissue in the dermis, which is diagnostic for nevus lipomatous superificials. Such excision was then done.
Conclusion: Excision of nevus lipomatous superificials are CS2. This is a rare benign hamartomatous skin lesion. Histopathology plays a vital role in the diagnosis of this condition. A high index of suspicion, a good clinical eye and dermatopathologic analysis are the essential tools in checking the diagnosis.

A novel method for preparing recipient site in epidermal graft in acral vitiligo treatment using electrodissection
 Ihsan El-Fakhary, MD, Mina University, Minia, Egypt; Ihsan Abdel-Rawaf, MD, Minia University, Minia, Egypt; Walied Medhat, MD, Minia University, Minia, Egypt; Enas Khafar, MS, Minia University, Minia, Egypt
Introduction: Acral vitiligo is considered one of the challenging dermatoses facing dermatologists. The mainstay of treatment is medical therapy, but it is not very effective. Some cases may then need surgical excision to avoid graft rejection. These procedures also are time consuming and need special and expensive equipment for preparing recipient site.
Aim of the study: Preparation of a simple, easy, effective, time saving and less costly method for preparation of recipient site in epidermal graft procedures.
Patients and methods: Epidermal graft was obtained by cupping of normal skin in the patient's back. The recipient site was prepared using electrodissection. An acral vitiligo Electrodissection equipment was used for dermoepidermal separation at recipient areas. Follow up of patients continued for 6 months postoperatively.
Results: Replantation was obtained in twenty one cases successfully. Preparation of recipient sites was done effectively and successfully in all cases without graft rejection.
Conclusion: Electrodissection may provide a new, simple and effective method for preparing recipient site in epidermal grafts treating acral vitiligo.

A novel purse-string suture and dehydrated human amnion/chorion membrane allograft closure technique for the repair of defects following Mohs micrographic and excisional surgery
 Kelly E. Beck, MD, East Avenue Medical Center, Maywood, IL, United States, Erik R. Hartsorn, MD, Loyola University Medical Center, Maywood, IL, United States, Ricardo Berríos, MD, Brandon Dermatology, Brandon, FL, United States, Jeane Resceva, MD, Loyola University Medical Center, Maywood, IL, United States, Rebecca Lung, MD, Loyola University Medical Center, Maywood, IL, United States, Michael Peterson, MD, Loyola University Medical Center, Maywood, IL, United States
Purpose: To determine the efficacy, wear satisfaction, and ease of wound care of the combination of purse-string suture and dehydrated human amnion/chorion membrane (dHACM) allograft closure technique for the repair of Mohs micrographic (MM) and excisional surgery defects in a medically fragile patient population.
Design: In this retrospective study, 6 elderly patients in a multiphasic oncology practice with MM and excisional surgery defects were treated with the combination of purse-string suture and dHACM. Case 1 was an 84-year-old with a left temporal scalp basal cell carcinoma (BCC) requiring reconstruction and minimize wound care responsibilities were identified. Case 2 was an 85-year-old with a left temporal scalp basal cell carcinoma (BCC) requiring reconstruction and minimize wound care responsibilities were identified. Case 3 was a 101-year-old with a right dorsal hand squamous cell carcinoma (SCC) requiring reconstruction and minimize wound care responsibilities were identified. Case 4 was an 80-year-old who underwent wide local excision for a recurrent scalp melanoma leaving a 7.29 cm<sup>2</sup> defect and closed with purse-string suture to 3.4 cm<sup>2</sup>. All defects were covered in trimmed dHACMs, with sterile adhesive strips, and the patient was discharged to home. Case 5 was an 80-year-old who underwent wide local excision for a recurrent scalp melanoma leaving a 7.29 cm<sup>2</sup> defect and closed with purse-string suture to 3.4 cm<sup>2</sup>. All defects were covered in trimmed dHACMs, with sterile adhesive strips, and the patient was discharged to home. Case 6 was an 80-year-old who underwent wide local excision for a recurrent scalp melanoma leaving a 7.29 cm<sup>2</sup> defect and closed with purse-string suture to 3.4 cm<sup>2</sup>. All defects were covered in trimmed dHACMs, with sterile adhesive strips, and the patient was discharged to home.
Discussion: All defects healed rapidly without complications. Rates of complete epithelialization and allograft methods of reconstruction stemmed from the goal to facilitate wound healing. The purse-string suture can decrease defect size and it decreases wound tension, protects hemostasis, and minimizes healing duration. This study demonstrated that the combination of purse-string suture and dHACM, with appropriate management and reduces healing times. PDH was utilized for its aggressive management and potential wound healing properties. Conclusion The use of combination purse-string suture and dHACM closure technique for reconstruction of defects following MM and excisional surgery is a viable option for reconstruction. Excellent cosmetic outcomes, acceptable healing times, and low wound care burden. This closure method may be a consideration for the repair of cutaneous surgical defects in select medically challenged patient populations.

3179 Prognostic granuloma appearing in a port wine stain after pulsed dye laser treatment
Jason Mecker, MD, West Virginia University, Morgantown, WV, United States; Marcus Bruce, West Virginia University, Morgantown, WV, United States; Roxann Powers, MD, West Virginia University, Morgantown, WV, United States

Prognostic granuloma is a known complication of port wine stains and other port wine stains can lead to trauma resulting in formation of pyogenic granulomas. Within the port wine stain spontaneously, after trauma, or after treatment with pulsed dye lasers or cryotherapy. The very treatments used in an attempt to treat port wine stains, can lead to trauma resulting in formation of pyogenic granulomas. We present a 55-year-old female with persistent port wine stain following pulsed dye laser treatment over a 10 year period. She was being treated every other month with gradual improvement with new vessels appearing, despite the use of mafenide acetate and it was shown to be a pyogenic granuloma. It remains interesting that the very treatments we use frequently for port wine stains can trigger formation of new lesions, such as port wine stains, that can also be paradoxically treated with laser treatment. We report on the pathogenesis of this lesion and discuss the natural progression of the malformation, but our attempts at treatment may actually trigger this rare complication of vascular malformations.

3078 Prospective comparison of the dual wavelength long pulsed 755-nm alexandrite/1064-nm neodymium:YAG laser versus 585-nm pulsed dye laser treatment for rosacea

Long-pulsed laser treatment of rosacea is effective for persistent erythema, flushing, telangiectasia, and papules, but current treatments include oral/topical agent and vascular laser therapy are not satisfactory. Objective: To compare the effectiveness of the dual wavelength long pulsed 755-nm alexandrite/1064-nm Nd:YAG laser (LPAN) with 585-nm pulsed dye laser (PDL) for rosacea.

Methods: This was a single-blind randomized controlled trial. Full face received a long-pulsed laser treatment in one session. Clinical outcomes were evaluated by spectrophotometry, digital photographs, and patient satisfaction surveys. Results: Thirty rosacea patients, all skin types III to V, 57% women, mean age 49 years, completed the study and were analyzed. There was no significant difference between LPAN and PDL in the mean reduction of the erythema values by spectrophotometric assessment ( $P = 3.25, 85.4\%$  vs.  $76.6\%$ , respectively). However, patients with more than 50% improvement by photographic assessment was higher in LPAN than that in PDL ( $P = 0.25, 71.3\%$  vs.  $8.3\%$ ).

Conclusions: Laser settings are not standardized between two devices. Limitations: Both LPAN and PDL are effective in the treatment for rosacea. Compared with PDL, LPAN may be more effective in rosacea treatment.

Background: Preoperative topical anesthetic cream may interfere the photothermal reaction in the treatment of ablative fractional resurfacing laser (AFRL). The objective of this study was to compare the ablative width and coagulative depth of laser with and without pretreatment with topical anesthetic cream.

Methods: The excised skin of 4 females who underwent abdominoplasty was randomly divided into 2 areas. Eutectic mixture of local anesthesia (EMLA) with 1% tetracaine and 2% amideprocaine stratin aluminum gel (FEMAG). The objective of this study was to compare the ablative width and coagulative depth of laser with and without pretreatment with topical anesthetic cream.

Results: In FCO2 treated specimens, the mean ablative width of EMLA and control group were  $308.7 \pm 21.4 \mu\text{m}$  and  $307.8 \pm 21.4 \mu\text{m}$ , respectively. The mean coagulative depth of EMLA and control group were  $59.9 \pm 9.6 \mu\text{m}$  and  $52.0 \pm 15.0 \mu\text{m}$ , respectively. There were no significant differences in ablative width and coagulative depth between both groups ( $P = 57$  and  $P = 23$ ). In FEMAG treated specimens, the mean ablative width of EMLA and control group were  $386.20 \pm 46.90 \mu\text{m}$  and  $426.97 \pm 46.90 \mu\text{m}$ , respectively. The mean coagulative depth of EMLA and control group were  $30.73 \mu\text{m}$  and  $71.90 \pm 18.99 \mu\text{m}$ . There were no significant differences in ablative width and coagulative depth between both groups ( $P = 21$  and  $P = 21$ ).

Conclusions: Pretreatment with topical anesthetic cream provided no effect on ablative width and coagulative depth of both FCO2 and FEMAG laser irradiation.

The use of 830 nm LED photomodulation in conjunction with intermittent 590 nm photocoagulating to improve erythema and skin barrier function after fractional ablative skin resurfacing

Thianwan Jantphonon, MD, Department of Dermatology, Faculty of Medicine Mahachulalongkornrajavidyalakul Hospital, Bangkok, Thailand; Woraphong Manassakul, MD, Department of Dermatology, Faculty of Medicine Siriraj Hospital, Mahidol University, Bangkok, Thailand; Woraphong Manassakul, MD, Department of Dermatology, Faculty of Medicine Siriraj Hospital, Mahidol University, Bangkok, Thailand; Somsri Srirojanakulchai, MD, Department of Dermatology, Faculty of Medicine Siriraj Hospital, Mahidol University, Bangkok, Thailand; Woraphong Manassakul, MD, Department of Dermatology, Faculty of Medicine Siriraj Hospital, Mahidol University, Bangkok, Thailand

Introduction: The duration and degree of downtime following fractional ablative laser treatment is a major concern. LED light has been shown to improve skin barrier function and reduce post-inflammatory hyperpigmentation (PIH) after fractional ablative laser resurfacing.

Methods: Twenty-eight healthy subjects with rhynoids or acne scars were enrolled and treated with single episode of fractional CO2 laser. Immediately after laser treatment, one side of their face was randomly selected and treated with post-inflammatory hyperpigmentation prevention cream. The other side of their face was treated with post-inflammatory hyperpigmentation prevention cream. The duration of downtime was measured on the daily follow up period of seven days after treatment. Months follow up using photographs and melanin index.

Results: There was no significant reduction in duration of post-laser erythema, PIH, and PIH. However, there was a significant reduction in duration of post-laser erythema ( $P = 0.89, 0.98, 0.75$ , respectively). The duration of post-laser erythema was  $5.5 \pm 2.2$  days for LED treated sides and  $5.1 \pm 2.1$  days for untreated sides. Post-inflammatory hyperpigmentation seemed to be lower in treatment group (LED =  $32.2\%$ , control =  $65.2\%$ ); however, statistically significant difference between two groups either ( $P = 94$ ).

Conclusion: Single episode of the combination 590 and 830 nm LED treatment immediately post fractional laser resurfacing was not effective in reducing erythema, enhancing skin barrier function as well as reducing post-inflammatory hyperpigmentation. Multiple treatments might be required.

The efficacy and safety of combination therapy using deep penetrated CO2 fractional laser and subcision with CO2 gas for acne scar

Donghye Suh, MD, PhD, Avramulim Nara Dermatologic Clinic, Seoul, South Korea; Ka-Yoon Chang, MD, PhD, Avramulim Nara Dermatologic Clinic, Seoul, South Korea; Hyeon-Gook Lee, MD, PhD, Avramulim Nara Dermatologic Clinic, Seoul, South Korea; Hwa Jung Ryu, MD, PhD, Department of Dermatology, Korea University College of Medicine, Ansan, Korea; Kyungdo, South Korea; Sang-Young Lee, MD, PhD, Department of Pathology (Chung-Ang University), Seoul, South Korea

Background: Various treatment modalities have been used to treat acne scars. Deep penetrated CO2 fractional laser (SCAR-FXTM) can make up to a 4 mm impact into the skin. Other CO2 fractional laser treatments only penetrate up to 1 mm into the skin. CO2 gas is known to stimulate collagen synthesis by inducing neocollagenesis. The combination of SCAR-FXTM and CO2 gas may be more effective in taking effect by needle with high pressure can cause leakage of fibroblastic collagen into the dermis by not only subcision but also CO2 gas effects. Carbon dioxide (CO2) fractional laser (SCAR-FXTM) is the effective and commonly used tool for acne scar to ablation.

Objective: This study was conducted to evaluate the efficacy and safety of deep penetrated CO2 fractional laser (SCAR-FXTM) and subcision with CO2 gas. Methods: The 20 patients with skin phototype III and IV with acne scars were treated with subcision with deep penetrated CO2 fractional laser (SCAR-FXTM) and CO2 gas subcision with 4-weeks interval. CO2 gas subcision was used first, then deep penetrated CO2 fractional laser (SCAR-FXTM) at energy 90 J/cm<sup>2</sup> with density 1-3 cm<sup>2</sup> using a quartile grading scale. Any adverse effects were assessed during the entire study period. A punch biopsy was performed before and after treatment in 2 patients for histologic analysis.

Results: All patients experienced both subjective and objective improvement. No serious adverse effects, including post-inflammatory hyperpigmentation and acne, were observed. The combination of SCAR-FXTM and CO2 gas subcision with dermis and Victoria blue stains showed increased dermal collagen with the leveling of the dermis and straightening of elastic fibers in the reticular dermis after treatment. Conclusion: Combination therapy using deep penetrated CO2 fractional laser (SCAR-FXTM) and subcision with CO2 gas was satisfactory and safe for acne scar.

Topical phenytoin for leprosy ulcer
 Parthiban Ramasamy, MBBS, MD, Lifecare Medical Center, Coimbatore, India
 Topical phenytoin is a common complication of leprosy as disabling, decreasing, and demoralizing for patients. Factors such as focal hyposthesia, repeated trauma, anatomic disturbance of vessels, secondary infections, and osteomyelitis has always been the major obstacle in the management. Phenytoin, an antiepileptic various etiologies. Phenytoin is involved in the healing process at several levels, including stimulating fibroblast proliferation, enhancing the formation of granulation tissue, decreasing collagenase activity, promoting deposition of collagen, decreasing bacterial contamination, and decreasing wound edematous.

Treatment of recalcitrant chronic GVHD ulcers using combined silver collagen matrix and silver foam dressings may impact antibiotic resistance and hospitalizations in patients with chronic GVHD
 Timothy Almaraz, MD, City of Hope Comprehensive Cancer Center, Duarte, CA, United States
 Chaitanya M. Dhadwal, MD, PhD, City of Hope Comprehensive Cancer Center, Duarte, CA, United States
 Background: Chronic graft versus host disease (GVHD) affects nearly half of all allogeneic transplant recipients and is a significant cause of morbidity and mortality. The formation of skin ulcers at the site of sclerotic, cutaneous GVHD may lead to bacterial superinfections and frequent patient hospitalizations. There is a paucity of data on the use of silver dressings in the management of cutaneous GVHD-related ulcers, and whether such treatments impact infection rates, antibiotic resistance, and rates of patient hospitalization.

Commercial support: None identified

Discussion: Silver-containing, collagen scaffold dressings are bactericidal and assist in replenishing some of the structure, components, and signaling mechanisms of the epidermal barrier. Silver foam dressings have been shown to be effective and improves blood and lymphatic flow to and from the ulcer. Our observations suggest that a combination of collagen silver matrix, silver sponge dressing, and compression may be a synergistic, useful method to achieve near complete or complete or near complete ulcer resolution after collagen silver matrix was applied directly to the ulcer bed, in combination with a silver sponge dressing placed over it. A foam dressing was applied using an adhesive wrap. Dressings were changed every 3-4 days. After 12 weeks, the patients were observed to have had fewer hospitalizations related infections and hospitalizations.
