A method, system, apparatus, and computer program product are presented for enabling a user to capture Web content or via a client's Web browser. The captured content is then processed and stored in a customized manner at the server, preferably using user-specifiable scripts. Optional default scripts may also be used. Hyperlinks to the captured content files are conveniently stored in the user's Web page at the server in a manner desired by the user under the control of the server-side scripts. After capturing the content, the user can then access the user's Web page to view the Web page and select the automatically generated hyperlinks. If desired, the user may subsequently edit the Web page to change the hyperlinks, delete hyperlinks, etc. Since the user is able to specify and/or write a script to perform the processing of the pages into which the hyperlinks are placed, the user has significant control over the manner in which the captured content is presented within a user's own Web pages or other files.
