Bluetooth headphones

Amazon

I'll admit it; I was a Bluetooth headphones skeptic before receiving a pair of my own. Who has time — let alone remembers — to charge their headphones? But it's been almost a year since I tested TaoTronics' sports headphones and it's still one of the best tech upgrades I've ever made.

The one place these headphones have proved the most useful is the gym. Before going wireless, my phone would regularly fly off the treadmill or stationary bike if I made any sudden movements, taking my headphones with it. Now, my phone stays put, my headphones stay in my ears, and I'm a lot happier for that.

After leaving the gym, I separate my dirty workout clothes and shoes from everything else I'm carrying using the plastic bags provided by the gym. After the second day of doing this, though, I realized I'd be wasting an irresponsible amount of plastic unless I was going to remember to bring the originals with me every time I went.

Instead, I wanted to apply the same idea as bringing reusable bags to the grocery store. BAGGU's reusable bag is a good fix for this, though not perfect; I tie the handles together before stuffing it back into my backpack.

Blender Bottle

I like drinking a post-workout protein shake before I leave the gym. I used to keep my big protein jar in my bag, but now that I head straight into the office after working out, I hate carrying that heavy tub with me.

Pouring the protein into my shaker bottle before going to the gym creates a different problem: The powder sticks to the bottom, making it more difficult to mix and creating a bad smell after a couple uses.

ProTak's BlenderBottle has a "Twist n' Lock" storage system that holds the protein powder in its own compartment. This lets me pour it in after my workout is done, keeping the bottle clean and my bag lighter and less stuffed.

I even use my bottle to drink water during the workout and use it for protein afterwards.

A special balm for sore muscles

I think of sore muscles after an intense workout class as small trophies. If I wake up the next day ache-free, it's an indication I didn't perform each move correctly or didn't give the class my all. However, sore abs, arms, and legs make it difficult to do the simplest tasks, like walking up a flight of stairs, picking up my bag, and even laughing.

For that reason, I keep a container of muscle balm on my nightstand so I can soothe my aches and pains the moment I wake up without having to army crawl to my bathroom. I'm currently in the market for a new balm, and with many positive reviews, I'm looking to give doTERRA's formula a try.
