I. INTRODUCTION

Plaintiffs' brief fails to justify its proposed constructions. For the terms that the patents expressly define, Plaintiffs reject those definitions and point to other, non-definitional language that departs from the patentee's intentions. For terms that Defendants identified as indefinite, Plaintiffs' explanations fail to resolve the ambiguity in those terms, as Plaintiffs' own expert testimony demonstrates. Finally, for the terms Defendants contend are governed by § 112 ¶ 6, Plaintiffs repeatedly point to functional language reciting what the terms do because they are unable to identify structural language in the patents describing what the terms are. Defendants' constructions should be adopted.

II. ARGUMENT

A. Family One Patents

1. “sourceless orientation tracker” / “sourceless measurement”

Plaintiffs attempt to recast the patents' express definition of “sourceless” as one of many “benefits” provided by a sourceless tracking system. Plaintiffs' Responsive Brief (“Resp.”) 3-4. But the specification's repeated, clear definition of “sourceless” to mean “can be used anywhere with no set-up of a source” should control.¹ Br. Ex. 1 ('068 Patent), Abstract and 1:36-38.

The patent's repeated, express definition of “sourceless” does not merely describe a benefit provided by the claimed “sourceless orientation tracker”; instead, this statement defines what “sourceless” means, as denoted by the quotation marks around the word “sourceless” and the transitional phrase “in that.” See Opening Brief (“Br.”) 5. Plaintiffs argue in response that “the claimed sourceless tracking systems” include a number of benefits, but the “sourceless orientation
